BCM SCHOOL CHANDIGARH ROAD FOUNDATIONAL STAGE “NEW TERM, NEW INTENT — A STRONGER START.”

The new academic session 2026–27 commenced on a cheerful and enthusiastic note at BCM School Chandigarh Road Foundational Stage. The school campus once again came alive with the joyful presence of students, their smiles, laughter, and vibrant energy creating a warm and welcoming atmosphere.

To mark the beginning of the session, a special assembly was conducted by the teachers. The assembly began with a melodious welcome song presented by the teachers, setting a positive and inviting tone for the day. The environment resonated with excitement, enthusiasm, and a sense of new beginnings. Photographs were captured during the assembly and activities, beautifully highlighting the “Welcome” theme and preserving these precious first-day memories.

A series of engaging welcome activities were organized for the students to make them feel comfortable, valued, and excited about the journey ahead.

The Nursery students created a vibrant poster using their hand impressions, adding a personal touch and helping them develop a sense of belonging.

The LKG students participated in a creative activity where they made pencil shapes using their hand impressions, symbolizing their readiness to explore, learn, and grow.

The UKG students designed a collaborative poster using the hand impressions of both teachers and students, reflecting togetherness, bonding, and a strong sense of unity.

Overall, the day was filled with happiness, creativity, and enthusiasm, setting a positive and encouraging tone for the new academic session.

AUDITORIUM ASSEMBLY: “CHANGE ORIGINATES WITHIN US”

The recent auditorium assembly on the theme “Change Originates Within Us” was not just another school gathering—it was an experience that genuinely made us pause and reflect. Instead of simply talking about change, the assembly made us feel it.

The highlight of the event was a TED Talk-style presentation that stood out for its creativity. What made it different? A live guitar element woven into the speech. At first, it caught everyone off guard. But slowly, it became clear—it wasn’t just for entertainment. It was used to prove a point: just like music changes with each note, our lives can change with each decision we make. The speaker emphasized that real change doesn’t come from outside pressure, but from an internal decision. That idea hit hard.

Then came an interactive game, and honestly, this is where things got interesting. Instead of a boring lecture on habits, the game used statistics to show how habits are actually formed. It broke down something we all struggle with—why we can’t stick to good habits or break bad ones. Seeing numbers and patterns made it real. It showed that change isn’t random. It’s structured. And if we understand the process, we can actually control it. That shift—from “I can’t change” to “maybe I can”—was powerful.

The emotional segment of the assembly came through a song performance that created a completely different atmosphere. It slowed things down. People actually listened. The lyrics focused on self-growth, struggles, and hope. You could feel the silence in the auditorium—not the awkward kind, but the kind where everyone is thinking something personal.

Right after that, the energy flipped. A high-energy dance performance brought the entire theme to life in a visual way. It symbolized transformation—starting from hesitation and moving towards confidence and strength. The synchronization, expressions, and intensity made it clear: change is not easy, but it is possible.

Overall, the assembly was a perfect blend of logic, emotion, and creativity. It didn’t just tell us that change is important—it showed us how and why it begins within us. And more importantly, it made us believe that we are capable of it.

Walking out of the auditorium, there was a different kind of vibe. People weren’t just talking—they were thinking. And maybe that’s the biggest success of the assembly.

Because real change?

It probably started right there.

THE POWER OF POLITE WORDS

In a world that moves quickly, the value of polite words is often overlooked. Yet, a simple “please,” “thank you,” or “excuse me” carries a quiet strength that can transform everyday interactions. Politeness is not merely a social formality; it reflects respect, empathy, and good character.

One morning at school, Riya noticed a new student sitting alone in the corner. Instead of ignoring him, she smiled and said, “May I sit with you?” That small act of kindness broke the silence. Soon, the two were sharing stories and laughter. What began with a polite question turned into a meaningful friendship.

Polite words create bridges where there may be distance. They ease conflicts, build trust, and make people feel valued. In classrooms, homes, and public spaces, courteous language fosters harmony and cooperation.

In conclusion, the power of polite words lies in their simplicity and impact. They cost nothing but can mean everything. By choosing our words thoughtfully, we contribute to a kinder and more respectful world—one conversation at a time.
